GILBERT STUART.

Born at Narragansett, Rhode Island, December 3, 1755; died Boston July 27, 1828. After some unaided efforts he received instruction from Cosmo Alexander, a Scotch portrait painter, whom he accompanied to Scotland in 1772. He found a friend in Benjamin West, whose studio he entered as a pupil, but soon became an assistant to his master. In 1785 he set up a studio of his own in London, achieving marked popularity and financial success. He visited Ireland in 1788, where he was received with great favor, and painted the portraits of many distinguished persons. He returned to America in 1792.

Among his sitters in Europe were Louis XVI, George III and George IV, while Prince of Wales. He also painted Alderman Boydell, John Kemble, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Benjamin West and many distinguished artists. The six presidents of the United States who sat to him for their portraits were George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and John Quincy Adams.

His portrait of Sir Ashley Cooper, the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury, in the Toledo Museum, was painted in Washington, D. C., in 1799. Sir Ashley's grandfather was the Ashley Cooper who obtained the grant of the State of South Carolina, which he proposed to develop solely in his personal interest. but for some reason failed to carry out his plans. 44. Notre Dame, Paris.

England

WALTER GREAVES.

Walter and Henry Greaves were pupils and close companions of Whistler as far back as 1863. The father of the Greaves boys was a boat builder in Chelsea. He had rowed Turner about on the river as his two sons were later to row Whistler. The Greaves boys idolized their master and apparently had but little thought of themselves and their own talents. Walter Greaves has lived quietly all these years in Chelsea in comparative obscurity. In 1911, when he was seventy years of age, an exhibition of his works was brought together in the Goupil Galleries, London, and the news was flashed throughout the world that a master as great as Whistler himself had received tardy recognition. Walter Greaves' style is very similar to that of Whistler, and yet it has unusual charm and great qualities all its own. Some two years before Walter Greaves was "discovered" to the world, Mr. Carl B. Spitzer, of Toledo, rummaging about in an old London book shop, found a striking portrait of Whistler in oil signed by Greaves. Recognizing its importance, he purchased it and presented it to the Toledo Museum of Art. Aside from its artistic excellence, it is also one of the most interesting and valuable portraits of Whistler in existence.

45. Portrait of James McNeill Whistler. Gift of C. B. Spitzer.

JOHN LAVERY.

One of a group of painters known as the Glasgow School. He was born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1858. 65. The Fishermen. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

BENJAMIN N. POPOFF.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts. His painting, "The Weaver," was awarded a Bronze Medal at the St. Louis Exposition.

66. The Weaver. Gift of Harry E. King.

PAVEL D. SCHMAROFF.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His "Lady in Carriage" was awarded a Gold Medal at the St. Louis Exposition. The picture, which is most interesting technically, shows a lady in black driving in a Victoria on the crowded boulevard. It is the impression of a second, the wink of an eye. The swish of the boulevard is indicated swiftly, but surely, with a few strokes of the brush. Christian Brinton, the eminent critic, in an article in the Booklover's Magazine, writes of Schmaroff's brilliant, fluent handling and exquisite melting tonality. "In his Lady in Carriage," says the writer, "the artist enters the ultra modern and modish sphere of existence with equal felicity. His work reveals the easy mastery of our latter day apostles of Velasquez without the least sacrifice of Slavic flavor."

67. Lady in Carriage. Gift of A. M. Chesbrough.

S M. SEIDENBERG.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg, Russia. His painting, "The Plowers," was shown at the St. Louis Exposition under the title, "Episode in the Reign of Roman Galitsky." The Prince of Red Russia, returning from a successful campaign against Lithuania, brought home an enormous number of Lithuanian prisoners, whom he caused to be treated like cattle, yoking them to crude wooden plows. The picture shows three men and a woman, driven afield like beasts, hitched with shackled hands and feet to the plow, or ralo, as it was called. Christian Brinton, writing of this painting in the Booklovers' Magazine for February, 1906, says: "For strength of handling, coupled with a moving sense of nature and a profound appreciation of dumb agony and forbearance, it would be difficult to excel Seidenberg's canvas."

68. The Plowers. Gift of Albion E. Lang.

V. P. VERESTCHAGIN.

Member of the Imperial Academy of Arts, Russia. His painting, "The Golden Cloud," was shown in the Russian section at the St. Louis Exposition. It illustrates a passage in the poem entitled "The Cliff," by the Russian poet, Lermontoff. A cloud has rested on the mountain top during the night, and now, bathed in the gold of the morning sun, it floats gently away, leaving the mountain sad and dejected.

JANUARIUS ZICK.

Born in 1733 in Munich. He was at first a pupil of his father, Johann Zick, but in 1757 he went to Basle and then to Rome. On his return he was, in 1761, appointed court painter at Coblentz. He also painted extensively in the churches of Upper Swabia and in Biberach. He died at Ehrenbreitstein in 1797.

72. The Crown of Thorns. Gift of J. G. Moulton.

SALVATOR ROSA.

Born near Naples, Italy, in 1615. When but eighteen years of age, he associated with and studied the bandits, and many compositions from his brush deal with the exciting experiences incident to their career. He was noted as a painter of battle scenes, his figures being full of movement and expression.

Adele Watson

Adele Watson was born at Toledo where she lived until about 1892. Her art education begun in New York was later supplemented by five years of study and travel in Europe. With a studio in New York and another in California, she is able to obtain great variety of material for her canvases. In this collection of paintings Miss Watson has drawn on the Old World for many of her subjects. Her portraits, figure compositions and landscapes show versitility and a viewpoint as original as it is pleasing.

Gennaro Favai

Gennaro Favai, a Venetian about thirty years of age, was one of the important exhibitors at the International Exhibition of Venice in 1910. His pictures reflect a strange personal vision and one feels he is far in advance of the great mass of modern painters. Much of his knowledge has been gained by a careful study of the old masters, especially Carpaccio, whom he considers the greatest master of all in the rendering of atmosphere. Favai exhibited for the first time when but sixteen years of age and every year since his pictures have been praised at the exhibitions of Paris, London, Munich, Dresden and Venice. Last year on the opening day of the Paris Salon all of his works were sold.

Ferruccio Scattola

Ferruccio Scattola a contemporary Venetian painter was born in 1873. He is a man who takes his place in the front rank of all the art movements of Venice and one whose judgment is much sought after privately as well as officially. His canvases show that he has unlimited resources and that painting for him is a means of expression and he presents what he feels and not what he sees. Scattola is represented in many important collections both in Europe and America and in 1910 at the International Exposition at Venice, an entire room was set apart for an exhibition of his works.

M. J. Iwill

Since 1875 M. J. Iwill has been the adopted name of a French artist whose family surname was Clavel. Born at Paris in 1850 his people desired him to enter upon a legislative career. To Clavel clerical work was most distasteful, so as the years passed it found him giving more and more time to painting. At first he worked alone, then became a student under Lugelet, Carl Kuwasseg, and Lansyer and when he exhibited his first canvas he proudly signed it with the two English words, I will, which afterward became one word and his signature. This picture was exhibited at the Salon of the Societe des Artistes Francais. The leading journals spoke of his work enthusiastically and much to his surprise, the young painter found himself suddenly famous.
